"At long last" ... after some [illegible] has returned to England; to see his aged mother. The man who gave up a throne to marry an American girl should be permitted to return home, if he so desires.

A MASTERLY JOB

From Winchester Star

Every day General MacArthur's ability to run Japan is being exhibited anew. In all of his dealings with the defeated enemy the general is showing the same cool-headed judgment and the same uncanny talent for getting maximum results with a minimum amount of force that he did in his military campaigns.

Wherever possible he has let the Japanese themselves shoulder the burden of carrying out the surrender terms. The commies in this country thought they saw an opportunity in this circumstance to create the impression that his occupation policy was soft. But the moment the Japanese have stepped out of line, General MacArthur has cracked down hard and promptly.

A fair example of how this policy works out is provided by the steps the general has taken to insure that Japan gets the freedom of speech and press called for in the Potsdam Declaration. It would have been impossibly difficult for the occupation forces to take over the publication or editing of all Japanese newspapers. But when Japanese editors began to misuse their freedom by printing anti-American propaganda, the general promptly whipped them into line. And when the Japanese government attempted to bar publication of the interview the emperor gave to two American correspondents, General MacArthur cracked down again by ordering the elimination of Japanese censorship of all kinds and the repeal of all laws controlling the written or spoken word.

In these, as in a dozen other instances, General MacArthur has succeeded in getting what he wants with a rare economy of effort. Instead of making the mistake of trying to accomplish everything at once, he has moved only when it was necessary to enforce his orders.

He has certainly lost nothing by employing his power with this judicious restraint. At the same time he is running Japan far more smoothly and with far less waste motion than if he had listened to the advice of some critics here at home. General MacArthur is doing a masterly job that promises to accomplish all occupation aims with a minimum of time and cost.

Meanwhile confusion continues in vast areas of Europe and whole peoples are left uncertain of the future in store for them. It is not a situation which makes for good will among nations or leads to the belief that the Russian dictator has learned anything from the fate of other dictators.

EUROPE'S FOOD NEEDS

From New York Times

Correspondents of the Associated Press in twenty European countries have surveyed the food outlook for the coming months and report the future bleak and ominous. The general conclusion is that disease, starvation and exposure will be rife as the war-torn nations struggle to get their transportation, industrial and agricultural systems into peacetime operation. Almost simultaneously a report comes from the United States Department of Agriculture which emphasizes the crisis. "It is plain," the report states, "that only substantial food imports from outside sources can save millions of Europeans from near starvation in the coming winter."

We cannot refuse aid to suffering people. Britain, still tightly rationed, is contributing to continental relief. We must send coal, foods, clothing and medicines. The need for trucks and tires, will be acute because of the almost complete paralysis of transportation in widespread areas. The extent of our aid will depend largely upon the action of Congress in providing funds for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The report of the Department of Agriculture shows the United States can spare substantial quantities of canned meats, powdered milk, eggs, cheese, dried fruits and some cereal grains. We are not called upon to go even a little hungry in order to feed the starving in Europe. We have enough, and to spare.

There is another angle. It will be political shortsightedness of the first water if we now refuse help to the peoples who have been suffering so long under dictatorship rule and totalitarian methods. The war has been won, so far as shooting, bombing and organized torture are concerned. But this can be a terrible winter for millions and millions of human beings unless our nation gets into action quickly. What shall it avail us in trying to construct a better world if we do not follow through with foods and medicines to replace the guns and grenades? For the future of those as yet unborn we cannot afford to have European nations build a reservoir of bitterness against a democracy that withheld aid in a great emergency.

Physical Improvement

From Peninsula Enterprise

It seems likely that one result of the war will be an improvement in the physical condition of the people. The returning soldiers will in the great majority of cases set an example of physical well being, although many are to doubt very tired and weary from the strain of battle. Many still suffer from wounds whose effects will be more or less permanent.

The great majority are likely to impress their friends and associates by vigorous health and strength. When people appear thus strong and healthy, they set an example which many are inclined to follow.

The physical examination for selective service was a revelation of the large number of men who suffer from some physical defects. The knowledge that they have these lacks has been an incentive to remove them. Probably the men thus rejected will feel a desire to improve their physical condition, and will study how by good eating habits, exercise, sleep, and treatments, they can attain a better physical condition.

The men who served in the armed forces were given abundant and well balanced foods, they had active exercise, and the life of training camps should have greatly improved their powers. They will be anxious to retain this health and strength so far as they can in civilian life.

One would think that the war experience would give people a new interest in and respect for the physical development methods by which people maintain strong health. When they have children brought up in the most healthy way. Vigorous people will take hold of the nation's work with energy, and accomplish results in their occupations.

Formula For Prosperity

From Charlotte Observer

What makes business prosperity and what makes depression?

You will get different answers to this question from different sources, depending, unfortunately, upon the self-interest which guides the thinking of such sources.

The simplest answer to the question is that production and sales of goods and service is the key that unlocks the door to national economic progress and prosperity.

Along with that must come wages and salaries high enough to enable people en masse to purchase for themselves the goods which are produced and which they need.

The more that is produced, the fuller the employment ratio, the higher the level of income which can be earned.

Full production, full employment and the highest possible wages that can be paid under these conditions —all these add up into national prosperity.

And they all go together.

These three, production, purchasing power and consumption.

They are inseparable. No one of them without both of the others would turn the trick.

They are, indeed, not three factors, but one with three facets.

The equation is simple:

It is made complex only when groups of people are more interested in developing a national economy that will serve their particular selfish interest rather than will serve the whole of the public interest.

SURGICAL ADVANCE

From Winchester Star

Experiments in rapid-recovery treatment after surgery, utilizing liver function tests and other chemical and physical data to determine rate of convalescence, have been carried on at the University of Illinois College of Medicine. The treatment was first tried on hernia patients because that operation is standardized. Hernia patients, normally not allowed out of bed for ten days, got up the day after their operations, walked around the hospital wards in less than six days and were ready to leave on their sixth post-operative day, but were kept longer for study.

The difference in recovery time is accounted for by exercise, food and certain supplements before and after the operation, according to reports of the experiments.

The next step in the experimentation is to extend the treatment to other types of surgical operations, in addition to hernia. Gallbladder patients may be slated to receive the treatment, since that operation also is considered standardized.

Of special interest is the fact that the new treatment was developed as part of a war medicine project in the department of internal medicine and surgery at the university. This seems to be in line with the general trend of the treatment of war casualties.

The war has widened the horizons of healing along with those of many other arts and sciences, and the inspiration of the compelling emergencies of war has itself been a contribution to the professional zeal of those who practice these arts. New traditions have been established, not only in standards of living but in human survival.

The world has suffered much but has learned much that may make man's burdens and measured existence on earth more endurable.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

THE HOME FOSTERING CHRISTIAN IDEALS

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 6:4-9; Luke 2:51, 52; Ephesians 5:22, 25; 6:4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.—Ephesians 4:32.

"Juvenile delinquency" as an expression often heard in our day, it speaks of the awful way in which our boys and girls have gone astray spiritually and morally in recent years. Fortunately, we are beginning to realize that most of the blame falls on the parents. It is a parental delinquency in the matter of proper rearing of the children which needs our earnest attention.

The home is the right place for the fostering of Christian principles of living, but all too often even Christian people have put that whole load on the Sunday school and church. They can help, but they cannot do the job which should be done in the home.

Some time should be a place where:

I. God's Word Is Accepted (Deut. 6:4-9).

The Bible teaches us the truth about God and that is information of the highest value and usefulness in the home. He is our God, and He is one God. There is no other God, and at the same time this is finite and eternal One is very close to us—our God. How precious!

The acceptance of the truth concerning God draws forth our love toward Him. He is not like the heathen gods who cause only cringing fear. He loves us and we love Him, with all our might (v. 5).

This Word of God and the truth concerning Him should be in the moral and natural subject of conversation in the home.

Any time, night or day, and anywhere, in the house or on the street, it should be as easy for a boy to talk to his father about God as to discuss his school work, or sports, or any other thing.

Let's make it a natural, normal, accepted thing that God and His Word are talked about in the home.

II. Growth Is Expected (Luke 2: 51, 52).

In the well-ordered home the child finds his place as Jesus did, as an obedient, well-mannered, co-operative member.

There, too, is the natural place for normal, well-balanced development. There must first be growth in wisdom. The mind and will must be in control, lest the physical get out of hand. They must develop, even as the body grows. Thus the growth of the body becomes not just an animal development, but one amenable to proper restraints, cultivated and poised for full usefulness.

But the home fails if it does not at the same time give the child a chance to grow "in favor with God and man." The boy Jesus continued to grow in gracious personality, with both God and man as the interested recipients of the fruits of His spiritual development.

Every home should be a Christian home and every Christian home should be a center of normal growth for children. This should give a cultured Christian men and women for the next generation.

III. Love Is Expressed (Eph. 5: 22, 25).

Love is not just a warm and tender feeling hidden away in the heart. It shows in the homely details of daily life in the home.

A Christian wife expresses her affection for her husband by giving him his God-appointed place as head of the house. There is a graceful and voluntary submission to God's plan for the home which makes for order and unity. Happy is the woman who seeks that place and lives in it! Her life will be blessed!

A Christian husband will learn to control that natural masculine tendency to dominate. He will study the gentle art of courtesy and kindly affection. He will love his wife as Christ loved the Church, and that means a willingness to both live and die for her.

Christianity really should show forth at its very best in the home but, alas, so often just the contrary is true! Let us get that thing straightened out and keep it right.

IV. Rights Are Respected (Eph. 6:1-4).

Mutual devotion between husband and wife, and mutual trust between parents and children—there we have the basis of a real God-honoring home.

We must give attention to the matter of a fair and full recognition of the rights of others. The parent who rides roughshod over the wills of his children need not profess to be a true follower of Christ. Likewise, children who are disobedient and insolent to their parents have no real testimony for Christ.

This business of being a Christian is real. It calls for right living everywhere, and that must begin at home. In the home the parent and child must both learn and live the high standards of Christ.

Take My Word For It!

By FRANK COLBY

HOW DID IT START?

Q.—Who was "Davy Jones" and what is meant by his "locker"?

A.—In nautical lore, Davy Jones has long been spoken of as the evil spirit of the sea. The name is supposed to be a corruption of Duppy Jonah. Duppy, a word used among Negroes of the West Indies, designates a malevolent haunting spirit. And Jonah, of course, refers to the Jonah of the New Testament; his name has become a synonym for a person or thing that causes bad luck.

Davy Jones's locker is the bottom of the sea. Of lost ships or drowned seamen, it is said that they have gone to Davy Jones's locker.

Q.—How did the Mardi Gras carnival of New Orleans get its name?

A.—Mardi gras is French for "fat Tuesday." It refers to Shrove Tuesday, which is the day before the beginning of Lent, therefore, the last day of feasting. In France a fat (gras) ox was ceremoniously paraded through the streets.

In New Orleans the carnival of Mardi Gras ends on Shrove Tuesday. "King Rex," accompanied by his 'Mystick Krewe of Comus," appears in the spectacular parade of floats, and is later unmasked at the Mardi Gras ball.

In Roman Catholic countries the carnival is a period of festivals and merrymaking preceding Lent. The carnival takes its name from the Latin phrase carne vale, meaning, "flesh, farewell" an allusion to the putting aside of carnal things during the Lenten season. (Carnal is from the Latin carnis, which meant originally "a piece of meat.")

FEAR AN UPSWING IN HOG CHOLERA

Is another upswing in hog cholera losses due this year?

Since this disease first swept Ohio a hundred years ago, it has tended to occur in cycles. Every peak of these cycles is reached about every ten to thirteen years. Even during the low point of occurrence several thousand outbreaks are usually reported, with estimated losses up to $20,000,000.

Veterinarians and livestock health officials are deeply concerned that cholera may flare badly this year, especially as the cycle is now long overdue. Contributory factors are failure to seasonally immunize thousands of herds because of unfavorable market outlooks, the heavy carryover of unvaccinated brood sows, and a general let down in sanitation and husbandry methods because of the farm labor shortage.

Common danger signals of a pending cholera outbreak are: The death of one or more pigs; failure to eat; a tendency to hide in the litter; weakened hind legs; staggering gait; gummy eyelids; discolored skin.

There is no way to forecast when or where hog cholera may strike. Often the first symptoms are mistaken for less serious hog ailments.

Yet delay may result in total death loss of all swine on the farm. The only safe procedure, and the most inexpensive insurance policy against cholera losses is proper vaccination of all susceptible swine on the farm even though no hog cholera is known to exist in the immediate neighborhood. That seems to be especially sound practice this season.

Protecting a Milk Herd Against Fire

Midwestern Dairyman Builds Improved Barn

Fireproof "vault" or barn is the latest development in farm construction and remodeling. Pioneering the way is Alick Clarkson of Itasca, Ill.

Interior construction of fireproof "vault" on Clarkson farm at Itasca, Ill.

His 45 by 36 foot dairy barn has a noncombustible floor and is of such sanitary construction that quality milk can be produced with little effort. The ground floor is protected from fire by a more floor of three-ply, 1½ inches thick, laminated gypsum board and a gypsum wallboard ceiling.

The studs are covered on the outside with noncombustible gypsum sheathing and fireproof composition shingles, and on the inside with fireproof wallboard.

Clarkson's use of laminated gypsum board for flooring is something new in barn construction. The purpose of the construction is to assure him that a fire would not quickly spread to the cattle quarters, and that ample time would be given to remove the cows to safety.

Agriculture In the News

W. J. DRYDEN

Tomatoes of 1946

Tomatoes, already rating high in vitamin content, being second only to oranges in vitamin C, will be "enriched" with vitamin A, following work at University of Chicago.

Tomato cannery wastes will be put to use. Oil being extracted from the seeds, cannery waste will provide an extracted ether soluble fraction of 12.4 per cent.

By treating plants with the fumes of a growth-promoting acid, naphthoxyacetic, seedless tomatoes may be produced.

Creep-Fed Pigs Grow Bigger in Less Time

When pigs on rye pasture were creep-fed, 5.6 per cent more of the pigs survived to weaning age than when they were forced to eat with the sows, experiments at the University of Illinois reveal.

The average daily gains of the pigs are greater under the creep-feeding method. The difference noted of .06 pound per pig a day is of doubtful significance, but the total gain for 100 pigs would amount to 6 pounds in favor of those fed in the creep. If fed for 40 days, the 100 creep-fed pigs would show a difference of 240 pounds more pork up to weaning time.

Farm Fire Losses

Fire extinguishers are again available for the farmer. Where fires in wood, paper, cloth or hay break out, suitable types of extinguishers are the pump tank, soda acid, foam, gas cartridge, or loaded stream types.

Soda acid and foam extinguishers must be kept where they will not be exposed to freezing temperatures, or else be housed in suitably heated cabinets, and they require annual recharging.

What about BUS TRAVEL Now?

HERE ARE GREYHOUND'S ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS ABOUT TRAVEL TODAY

Q. Can I travel any time I like—to any place I please?
A. Yes, you may now travel on business or pleasure to any of the thousands of points served by Greyhound.

Q. Do buses still have to travel at 35 miles an hour?
A. No. Greyhound's new time-saving schedules will get you to your destination earlier, and this stepped-up service will mean more trips daily, more seats available.

Q. Does that mean buses will no longer be crowded?
A. No. Although the war is over, Greyhound will still be in "military service" for a while. Thousands of discharges, others traveling on furlough, and war workers returning to their permanent residence will be depending on Greyhound — so some buses will still be crowded.

Q. How soon can we expect to ride in new Greyhound buses?
A. We are getting some buses now, and have others on order. Present plans call for replacement of one-third of our fleet by the end of 1946. New coaches, plus modern terminals, Expense-Paid tours and other improvements will make travel by highway more pleasant than ever before!
